Q1. Read the passage given below and answer the questions/complete the statements that follow:

CHARGING, THE WIRELESS WAY

(8)

- Cell phones have changed the way we communicate in the last decade, and despite standards being developed to make chargers universal, there is always the same old issue: where to plug it in, and with what charger. The situation has gotten worse with the use of smart phones that drain their charge within a day.
- 2) The Israeli company Powermat has developed a brilliant solution that allows you to charge your smart phone, iPod or handheld service simply by setting it down on a small high tech charge pad.
- 3) You need no cord, no plug just a small case or receiver that is permanently affixed to your
- 4) You come home or enter the office, set up to three devices or the met and voils, after the required charge is achieved, Powermat shuts down and you're good to go.
- 5) "It is an increasingly wireless world and we are more tied down with wired devices and finding the right charger," says Beth Meyer, Vice President of global marketing. "Powermat gets rid of the tangle."
- 6) Meyer points out that Powermat can actually extend the battery of handheld devices and phones, which are more often than not overcharged. Powermat determines what charge to deliver and for how long. That will help prolong the battery's lifespan, consume less energy and cut down on environmental greenhouse gases.
- 7) The mat, which can be bought on the internet for around Rs. 2700, is plugged into a power source, and using a digital 'handshake', charges the smart device or phone via a receiver or case attached to it.
- 8) After launching Powermat to retail success in 2009, "we are going to build a truly wireless world." Meyer says, noting that travellers should soon expect to see Powermat stations at airports.
- 9) According to Meyer, the Powermat can theoretically be developed to charge anything from a cell phone to an electric car- the latter on a bigger mat, obviously. Maybe even one you can park on.

FOOD WASTAGE IN INDIA

- 1) As the Indian middle class is getting more affluent, the number of celebration parties is growing and so is the guest list. We have functions for birth celebrations, first birthday celebration, engagements, marriages, promotions, sixtieth birthdays, marriage jubilees and even retirement policy. Lot of people get invited to each of these.
- 2) Just inviting people to such celebrations is not a problem. Because if a person eats at one place, he/she would save food he/she would have eaten somewhere else. The problem is, there is no RSVP (which is a French abbreviation that stands for 'Reply, if you please') culture in India. We send invites, but we don't ask people whether they are planning to attend or not. The host does not get any feedback and has a vague idea of how many people will show up. Certainly if more people showed up unexpectedly and had no food to eat, it would be embarrassing. So they just end up making enough for a large number of people. This results in wastage of food. Cooking gas and manpower. And because electricity is costly and food storage equipment is not so easily available. Huge amount of food goes waste.
- 3) Then we have people offering food and oil to Gods. While so many people are going hungry, we are bathing idols of our Gods in milk, honey or oil. We throw rice on the couple at marriages.
- 4) There is a lot of wastage in how we get our food. The last end of our food and vegetable supply chains are struct vendors, who lack adequate infrastructure to store food to reduce waste.
- 5) Our best of the best software engineers are writing software to run banks in US and Europe. Can't we launch a website that makes it possible for people to reply to invites using an easy, online or mobile based application? Yes, we need this one change in our culture- replying to invites and confirming whether we can make it to the celebration or not. Best of the best MBAs are launching marketing campaigns worldwide to increase market share of consumer products worldwide. Can't we launch a cultural change campaign?
- 6) We make choices and every choice has consequences. Sadly when faced with consequences of our choices, we externalise the blame. We find someone else to fault. We imagine only of that evil outside somewhere is fixed, we, the pious, people would continue living our pristine and perfect lives.
- If we saved all this food, it would suddenly make extra food available, thereby reducing food demand and eventually reducing good prices.

(b) What are the different ways in which food is being wasted in India?

(£) What kind of website, according to the poet, do we require to facilitate cultural change?
